imen of "human architecture" and when one sees him taking his collossean strides across the Hall, he is forcibly reminded of Virgil's description of Polyphomus, or perhaps feels some of the dread infused into the minds of the Isrealtish spice when they encountered the "dread saide him who seemedashamed of their pigmy proportions when contrasted with his, and it is mid that even Gov. MEARS looked comething of advarf while standing erect under his arm.— But poor fellow, the intellect that alone magnides and exalts the man, in him is clouded, makes you feel that you are gazing at a vast difice but partially tenanted.

I looked into the splendid ship South Carolina, which is now lying at her wharf, ready freighted. She attempted to sail on Wednesday moraling, but could not cross the Bar. She was built for the direct trade to Europe from this port, but, in the opinion of a great many experienced mes unless the bar is deepened the prasticability of which is doubted, she will be unable to leave with a full cargo. She is very handsomely furalshed, and all speak in high terms of her gentlemanly commander. I passed an agreeable and pleasant day at the Mouttrie House on Sullivan's Island, with a select party of sciends. The Island is quite deserted at this season of the year, but it visited every day by strangers, in fact, every person who lina, which is now lying at her wharf ready day by strangers, in fact, every person who visits the city for the first time "books" himself emotions now sunk into hopeless imbecility. He passed so near me that I could have touched him, and tottering toward a cluster of groves, him, and tottering toward a cluster of groves, he dropped upon a tombstone to rest his trembling limbs, leaned upon his staff, and rocking himself to and fre, wailed in low muttering tones his dirge for the dead. For a while his thoughts seemed incoherent and rambling. By degrees they became more distant, and at last, with starting earnestness, and in a voice, the recollection of which even now thrills me with recollection of which even now thrins me with horror, he thus broke forth: "Yes, ye are all gone! All! there is not one left of all I so truly loved. And I sent ye here. The husband and the father, who should have been your guide and stay, was your bitterest foe. But ye are quiet now. Ye may have rest here; while I can never know peace or happiness again. The bitter tears I shed are a fit reward for my deeds. Oh, if the grave could give up its dead, before I lie down beside you, I would tell you of the depth and bitterness of my repentance. Well are we avenged. The worm that dieth not; already preys upon my vitals. The fire that is not quenched is already kindled in my bosom.—Death can bring me no relief. The mountains cannot hide me from the wrath of an offended God." Then throwing his arms wildly upward, with a feeble shriek, he fell prostrate on the ground.

I hastened to him, and raising him in my arms, chafed his cold hands and strove to restore consciousness. He sighed heavily, and slowly withdrawing himself from me, sat down on the newly-made grave, and burst into tears.

Long and bitterly he wept. I did not strive to comfort him, for I well knew there is no balm so soothing to the bruised and broken spirit as the tear of repentance. I stood beside him until his emotion subsided, and then spoke to him of hope and comfort.—" Young man," said he, in ster, and bitter tones, "talk not to me of comfort. Bid the grave give up its dead—recall the deeds of a long life, and then bid me hope for peace.—No," said he, sorrowfully, shaking his head, "its all over now. They can never come to me—and how can I go to them! Would I were even now sleeping beside them."

While he thus unconciously uttered his thoughty aboud, I looked for the names upon the grave-stones. They were those of old triends, and the wretched being who sat trembling before, was my inther's friend and nearest neighbor.

welcomed with kindness, and took up his abode aminglus. It soon began to be whispered that the new tavern will not depend so much upon the custom of strangers as that of our own eitness.

The bur was supplied with the choicest wines and liquors, and the polite host made the poor and rich alike welcome. Soon the fraits began to appear. Red-faced, bloated men were to be seen at all hours lounging about the tavern door, or sleeping off the effects of last night's excess by their own fresides. Among their excess by their own firesides. Among their victims there was not one whose ruin seemer more certain than that of the ill-fated Jame Bond. Day and night be tim. Thrust by his tather from the house into a drenching storm, he never looked up again, and ston lay beside his sister in the grave yard. It so happened, that H. had fallen into the hands of some modern Dogberry appointed by the congregated wisdom of the State, to decide upon mesne and trivial causes, and judgment to some fifteen dollars and fifty cents, had been given against him. In due time our Dogberry placed an ings. execution in the hands of his constable with orders to collect the amount forthwith.

Our constable was as brave as consttables usually are, and put the execution in his pocket and day after day, repaired to the neighborhood of Mr. H's. residence with the design of furtively levying upon whatever stray mule or cow of Mr. H. might fall into his way, rather than run the risk of a pugilistic encounter, by calling on that individual himself. Matters thus continued for about three weeks, during which time our energetic Dogberry was daily urging on his dilatory subordinate to a more prompt settlement of the affair.

Thus urged on, our worthy constable with spirit worthy of a martyr, determined to see Mr. H. and bring the affair to a conclusion. Having fully made up his mind to fulfil his official duties, he shouldered his fowling-piece, and set out for the house o his victim, not however, without many fears and misgivings as to the manner in which his mission would terminate, fully resolved however, in event of matters being brought to extremities, to use his fowling piece for self preservation. He sauntered idly along the path which wound around a field beloaging to H, in no very enviable frame of mind deliberating with himself as to whether it were not better to return home and put off the disagreeable affair to be settled at some other time. While in this state of mind, a terrible noise in the brushwood attracted his attention. Surely H. was about leaping out upon him to execute a terrible vengeance! Our doughty constable had barely time to stammer out-

'For God's sake, Mr. H. I give up sir! and cast his gun upon the ground, when, out leaped three noble bucks, snorting and terrified beyond degree!

As soon as he could collect his faculties. the worthy limb of the law picked up his gun from the ground where he had cast it in the first moment of alarm and made the best of his way home.

Our informant states that though H. posssses an extensive farm and a goodly numher of negroes, the execution was next day returned to the Magistrate with the significant words 'Nullar Bonar,' spread upon it in characteristic chirography, and that our hold constable took the earliest opportunity of laying aside the burdensome cares of office, and retired forever to the peaceful shades of private life.

INTERESTING RELICS OF THE REVOLUTION.

The New York Herald, in allusion to various circumstances attending the celebration of Washington's birthday, has the following interesting particulars of two veterans who were present on the accosion:

Among those who witnessed the process on were two remarkably old veterans-Mr. Henry Gibson, one of Washington's Life Guards, who has attained the remarkable age of one hundred and one years, and Mr. Azar Holden, about ninety years of age .-Gibson, it seems, was born of Irish parents, on the voyage from Ireland to America, in 1751. He entered the line of the Continental army in the early part of the summer of 1775, by enlisting into the regiment of Coonel Henry Deafborn. He took part in all the service and actions in which that line was engaged, until the summer of 1780, when his term of service had expired. He from which he was soon after transferred to the Life Guards of the Commander-in-Chief. war, and received his final discharge at Messrs, Cannon & Kemp. He has always enjoyed an honorable char eter, but is very poor, having no support for himself and grand children except his yearly pension of $96, which is totally inadquate. He is feeble, but seems to enjoy tolerably good health for his are. The above named gentleman also brought a flag which was displayed from the balcony of the City Hall. It is said to have been taken from Washington's headquarters, Newberg, and appears to have been perfectly riddled with bullets. Gibson also witnessed the execution of Claudius Smith, who was a terror to the whole surrounding country. He was at the surrender of Burgovne, Cornwallis, and the battles of Monmouth and Brandywine. Holden was born 1762, in New Enged eight men at the battle of Lexington.seventy-five years, enjoys good health and

The Seventh Regiment of National Guards under Capt. Duryea, after leaving the Park, marched to the Battery, and from thence were conveyed to Governor's Island. They were received at the wharf by the officers of the Fourth Regiment of Artillery, and were then reviewed by Capt. Gardner, of the same regiment; after which, they proceeded to Castle William, where a salute was fired in honor of the day. From this, they went to the fort, where they remained for some time to partake of a collation. At two o'clock they reassembled at the dock, and were conveyed to the city.

SETH HAWKIN'S MISTAKE.

The Boston News gives us the following a having occurred in one of the villages of the old Bay State within the recollection of the writer. We do not know when we have enjoyed so hearty a laugh, ason reading this incident in the life of Seth Haw-

Sunday night was the season which Set chose to do his weekly devoirs, as Mrs. Hornby would say; and his road to neighbor ones's daughter Sally, the object of his par ticular hope, lay across three long miles of hard territory, stumpy as an old woman's mouth and as irreclaimable as a prodigal son gone away for the third time. One all sufficiently dark night, unheeding wind and weather, as gallant and spruce as ever straddled a stump, Seth in his best bib and tucker" and dickey and all that, started upon his accustomed weekly pilgrim age to the shrine of Sally Jones-the sweet girl, by the way, as strawberfies and cream are sweet.

Seth knew every land-mark, if he could see it; but the night was very dark, and in a little while he became confused in his reckoning and taking the light which gleamed from farmer Jones's cottage for a guide he pushed boldly on, regardless of intermediate difficulties, surging occasionally to the right or left, as some obstruction rose in his path, until he ran, stern on, as a sailor would say, to a huge stump and rolled incontiently over the other side.

He gathered himself up as best he could shook himself to ascertain that no bones were yuniversally worn. The wether has been broken, and then, started on his mission of the cold night wind playing fantastic jests around his body, denoting that the concussion had breached his " oh, fie, for shame," and that the seven-and-six penny cassimers that every boddy shall be jolly; and some were no more to be the particular delight of his eye, in contemplation of their artistic

He knew not the extent of the damage sustained, but soon gaining the house, his the milentary and the peeple in the public first glance was over his person to ascertain streets. The sojers' rations was sassenger if decency would be violated by an unwonted display; but seeing nothing and trusting to the grape without the juce. It was plesen the voluminous proportions of his coat for to see the reg'lars feedin on the fat of the concealment, he took his seat in a proffered chair by the fire.

Whilst conversing with the farmer about the weather, and the dame upon the matter of cheeses, he glanced at Sally, and saw with painful surprise, that she was looking anxiously and somewhat strangely, towards a portion of his dress. She averted her eves as she caught his glance, but again catching then enlisted into the battalion of heroes, her eves upon him, he was induced to turn his in the same direction, and saw-good heavens! was it his shirt ?- oozing out of a With him he remained till the end of the six inch aperture in the inside of his inexpressibles! He instantly changed position Mount Vernon. He has been residing in and from that moment was on nettles. Was Orange county for nearly fifty years, from he making more revelations by the change whence he was brought to the city by He watched the first opportunity to push the garment in a little. Could he succeed in hiding it, it would relieve his embarrassment. Again he watched his chance, and again stowed away the linen. It seemed interminable, like the doctor's tape worm, and the more he worked at it the more there seemed

In the mean time his conversation took the hue of his agony, and his answers bore as much relation to the question as the melancholy burthen of "Old Marm Pettingill." At last, with one last desperate effort, the whole disappeared and he cast a triumphant glance towards Sally. One look ed to show that she had comprehended the whole, and with the greatest effort was denounced, and Louis Napoleon is to be prestruggling to prevent a laugh. Meeting his sident for ten years. glance she could contain herself no longer, land, about twenty miles from Boston, and but screaming with accumulated fun, she professes to have heard the first shot that kill- fied from the room; and Seth, unable to endure this last turn of agony, seized his bat the Napoleon quick step is refered to the and dashed madly from the house clearing Marsellaise as a marchin tune. A new spec He was at the tattles of Monmouth and and dashed madly from the house clearing Marsellaise as a marchin tane. A new specwhich is found in how. As soon as he was gone, Mrs. Jones it is xpected that the celebrated Pah de Guithe fact that he walked from Twenty-fifth looked about for a clean night-gown that lotine and xecuted by Mounseer Robis-street to the City Hall, being a distance of the last out for service on the back of the peer, will be performed, for one time only, it was she couldn't conceive. " Sally," cried the old lady from the door, have you seen my night gown?"

"Yes, marm," echoed her voice as if in the last stage of suffocation-" yes'm, Seth Hawkins wore it home."

It was unfortunately the case, and poor Seth had stowed it away in the crevices of his pants! It was returned the next day with an apology, and he subsequently married Sally; but many years afterwards, if any article of any description was missing, of apparel or otherwise, the first suggestion was that Seth Hawkins had stowed it away in his trowsers.

Seth Hawkins is now a prominent and influential merchant in the city of Boston, and often relates the story himself for the amusement of his young friends,

LETTER FROM "A DISBANDED VOLUNTEER."

We regret to learn that our esteemed ex nilitary correspondent is under watch and ward in Paris. His cautiously worded let ter, speaks for itself; and our readers will excuse the absence of his usual sprightliness in view of the personal considerations tha controlled the arrangement of his parts of speech. It would be as reasonable to expec igorous and graceful dancing from a man in a sack as any thing like gaiety from a gentleman with two gens d'arme at his elbow When he gets out of custody, and the post office spy system is abolished, we shall doubt less hear from him to some purpose. In the mean time, those who read this letter twice. will find more in it than meets the eye at the first glance.
